The War Department issued an order yesterday providing that, upon the usual special requisition, the quartermaster's department, may furnish mineral oil or some other cheap and equally efficient agent for the destruction of mosquitos and their larvae. The necessity for the issue is to be certifled to by the post or camp surgeon in which this preventive is found necessary, and the oil or other agent is to be applied under his personal supervision.

CURRENT SPORTING NEWS

Manager Manning had to play four men in left field yesterday at Boston on account of injuries, yet the Beaneaters were able to win out only by the score of 2 to 1. Foster began in the position, but he had to quit on account of a bad leg. Grady then went out, but his bad hand drove him to the bench and Mercer tried to fill the position. But an injured leg made "Win" also quit, and then Lee, who had been pitching, was relieved by Patten and he went into the left garden. Under these trying conditions the close score was something remarkable.

Student Winters was on the rubber for the Boston lads and his twirling was extraordinarily good, but four hits being made by the Senators, two of which were placed to the credit of Sam Dungan, who can be depended upon to hit almost any twirler in the business.

Lee and Patten also pitched good ball.

There were nine hits credited to the Coldepended upon to hit almost any twirler in linsites, but they were scattered so successfully that but two runs could be chased over the rubber.

The fielding of both teams was fairly good, Coughlin, Farrell and Clingman doing the best work for the Senators, while the Boston infield made several lightning Washington's only run was hammered over the rubber in the sixth inning. Clarke opened up with a triple to left center and Dungan followed with a double. Big Sam worked up to third on Gear's long fly and out, but "Chick" Stahl broke into the game with a vengeance, right there, making a phenomenal catch of Patten's long drive to deep center and the Senators never had a chance thereafter.

Boston got its first run in the third. Dowd made a double to left, as Mercer was too lame to get under the fly, and Stahl's single to center allowed him to chase over the rubber. In the seventh the Beaneaters secured their second and last run, the one necessary to win. Winters opened with a single to right center and with two out timely singles by Freeman and Hemphill drove the student twirler over the plate. Manager Manning sends word from Boston that he is scouring the country for base ball players, but the search is liable to be a fruitless one, as good players are hard to get on account of breaking con-tracts. The minor leagues are all under the national agreement, and will not sell players to the American League. Should a player "jump" a national agreement club, sign with the American League and not be able to hold his place in the new organiza-tion, he would be out of a job for the remainder of the season. This is the condi-tion that confronts Manager Manning. Left Fielder Hayden, recently released by the Athletics, promised to sign with the Washingtons, but up to last night had not reported. He has all the earmarks of a good player, and with Manning may be able to make a good showing. Walter Hewitt, who is assisting Manager Manning with the business end of the Washington club, has been sent up into Pennsylvania on a look out for players in the hope that there may be more Planks and Winters lying around loose in the keystone state, and reports from him are awaited with interest. ANOTHER MEET ARRANGED

The bicycle races at the Coliseum, which were postponed from the night previous owing to an accident to the electric light circuit in the eastern section of the city, were run off last evening and every event on the program proved interesting to the large number of spectators. The electric lighting of the track was all that could be desired, and the big wooden bowl never looked prettier when the lights were turned on. Over 1,800 feet of additional cable had been put in by the electric light company during the day and perfect lighting was promised for the races last night. The amateur events were run off in fast time, and were of unusual interest. The feature of the meet, however, was the twenty-mile motorpaced race between Ray Duer of Buffalo and Oscar Babcock of New York. The event was won by the former in thirty-six minutes and ten seconds.

Two-Mile Handicap.

The two-mile handicap, owing to the large field of riders, was run off in two heats and a final. In the first heat Wilson and Moran were put on scratch with C. L. Bode, the limit man at ninety yards. Bode set off at a lively clip, and rode until the tenth lap, when the scratch man finally overhauled him. He rode the entire disthe race for a welter handicap at six fur-longs. Kicksy Wicksy, with L. Reiff up, won an all-age selling plate, five furlongs. tance without pace, and when the final brush home came he was unable to keep up the terrific pace set by the other riders, and fell by the wayside. Moran and Wilson rode side by side for a short distance, and for nearly the entire two miles Moran set the pace, even after catching the bunch, and his finishing in second place was con-sidered a remarkable ride, and showed his sprinting qualities after the ordeal. Wilson won the heat, with Moran second and Johnny Hill third. In the second heat six riders took to the field, without a scratch man. Ray Cogswell was practically scratch man, as he and Monday and Carrick will do his best started from the thirty-yard mark, with the limit man, E. P. Gooding, at 165 yards. The riders worked together well, and took turns pacing each other from start to finish. William Ward won out from the 65-yard mark after a good race, with Otis

Miller second and Eugene Gooding a close third at the finish. The final heat brought out three men from each heat, and the result was watched with interest. In the field were Moran, Wilson, Hall, Ward, Miller and Gooding.

When the final sprint came Ward had something up his sleeve and came down the stretch at a terrific speed that opened the eyes of all of the spectators, winning the event. While no records were broken, the riders are deserving of great credit for the manner in which they rode the race, and Duer's riding will undoubtedly place him among the coming middle-distance riders of the country.

In the last mile Babcock in some manner lost his pace, and while endeavoring to make up the lost time and catch his ma-

Little Significance in Leander's Victory at Henley.

"It seems to me that the English are little hasty in concluding that their style of rowing is superior to ours," remarked a gentleman who has been familiar with aquatic events for the past twenty-five years after reading the foreign comments on Leander's defeat of Pennsylvania yesterday at Henley. "It must be that the English are exceedingly doubtful about the effectiveness of their stroke, for they take the first opportunity to declare it vindi-cated. Even Col. Willian, the umpire, said when the prises were being presented: 'I fail to see any reason why we should

And the by-standers cheered as if the Americans had gone to England for the express purpose Manassau, was barred from the game for of inaugurating a new style and had been deservedly rebuked. The Leander stroke remarked: 'I still believe in the English style of rowing. It has stood the test.' Now these people protest too much. Penn sylvania never intended to make the race a test of rowing styles. If the English have so little faith in their streket has have so little faith in their stroke that they can hazard it on a race they must be faint-hearted indeed.

"The English seem to forget that Columbia sent € crew to Henley in '78 and won the visitors' challenge cup, and that der won by a scant length in the hardes; race that crew ever had. Certainly such a difference is not marked enough to determine a superiority in methods. A better crew won, that's all."

MADE A GOOD START.

How Pickering of the Clevelands Broke Into the Game.

When all other hot-air topics fail him. Oliver Daniel Pickering, center fielder of the Cleveland club, and formerly with the Louisville National League club, loves to relate the story of how he broke into the national pastime, says the St. Louis Republic. This is how Oliver Daniel effected an entrance: "In the spring of 1892," he said, "I went bankrupt buying postage stamps. I wrote to all the managers I ever heard of, asking for a job and inclosing stamps for reply None of them answered, so I pigged it from my home at Olney, Ill., to San An-tonio, Tex., a distance of 1,600 miles, hanging to the brake roos. They couldn't come too fast for me in those days, and I've caught a freight going twenty miles at hour. I had one stamp left, and I wrote to John J. McCloskey, manager of the Houston team. He said he'd give me a trial, and I lived under a high sidewalk at San Antonio a couple of weeks waiting for a ticket. McCloskey torgot to send the ticket o days before the season opened pigged it over to Houston. These days a player won't report without advance money, transportation and Pullmans, but the pig train was good enough for me.

"On the morning of the day the season opened I fell off a slow freight at Houston, hunted up McCloskey and said: 'I'n here.' He looked me over and said: 'Who are you? I told him, and he sort of gasped. I had a crop of whiskers with clinkers in them, one shoe and what clothes I wore were tied on with ropes and wire 'How did you get here?' McCloskey asked 'Pigged it,' I said. 'Tickets don't cut no ice with me. I've come 1,800 miles looking for a job.' 'Have you got any money?' the manager wanted to know. 'Couldn't make the first payment on a clay pipe,' I said. McCloskey said he guessed I'd do. He gave me 50 cents and told me to come out that afternoon for a trial. He said there might be something in me, and there was I blew 10 cents against a barber shop and the rest for grub, and maybe I didn't throw in a poultice that did me good.
"With a meal inside of me and rigged up in a new uniform I felt like a horse. Noth ing could stop me. In seven times at bat I made seven hits with men on bases, and they couldn't put anything past me in the field. Houston beat Galveston 30 to 1, and the town went crazy. When the excitement cooled down I strolled round near Mc-Closkey and wondered out loud if I could "'Come here,' he said. He hustled me down town, bought me a trunk, suit case, suit of clothes, snoes, underwear, shirts, collars; in fact, a whole dude outfit, and stabled me at a hotel with real beds in it. McCloskey must have spent all of $25 tog-ging me out, and I was the white-haired boy at Houston. I was stuck on being a ball player, and that was how I broke in, And, do you know, it was weeks before I could ride in a Pullman car without holding on with both hands?"

A HARD LOSER.

President Postal Said to Be Worrying

A special from Detroit to Sporting Life says that the burdens of ownership rest heavily upon Fred Postal of the Washington Base Ball Club. When he first became a magnate he carefully figured out how his team would win all the games and head the league from the opening of the season. But with the initial games came news of defeat after defeat. From his private office in the Griswold House to the telegraph office in the same building the base ball magnate wore a path.

The telegraph operator grew weary, but the telegraph office rich in revenue from "paid" messages to Manager Manning of the base ball team. The messages were of varied tenor—some were even basso profundo, if the score was unusually clammy and the burden of them was:

"Why didn't you put so-and-so in the box" "Why don't you report the umpire?" "How on earth did we happen to Manning may have said things to the grinning messengers, but he answered never a line by wire.

When he struck Detroit for the first time Manning dashed wild-eyed to the Griswold House. His wrath-provoker was not in "Where's Postal?" The Detroit end of the Washington base ball team appeared. "Here, you! Come He came. "Now, Fred, look here!" Manning cried, in quavering tone. "I'm a kicker myself, and a bad one. But for heaven's sake don't ever send me another of those messages! I can neither kill the umpire nor have him fired if we happen to lose! You must remember that we haven't all the ball players in the American League. The telegraph office in the Griswold House has since been deprived of its best

Johnson's Methods Effective. Upon the promise of reformation on the part of himself and his men, the five-day term of suspension imposed upon Manager

Griffith of the Chicago club was removed by President Johnson. There has been a by President Johnson. There has been a great improvement in McGraw and his players since the remission of the penalty of indefinite suspension to which Donlin was subjected. There is a disposition in some quarters to refer to these cases as evidence that President Johnson is weakening in the grusade he is conducting against rowdyism. Results have justified the wisdom of this course. Those who have been treated leniently know that another outbreak will be followed by a more severe maliciously attempted to spike Umpire Manassau, was barred from the game for five days. The announcement that Freeman of Boston, who is making more trips to the bench than home runs this season, is on the American League list of dishonor, is expected daily. It is surprising that he has escaped so long.—Sporting News.

Let the Umpire Alone. The majority of base ball scribes seem to be doing their best to prevent successful umpiring by their partisan criticisms of the work done by the umpires, their judgment their own crews sent to this country in 76 of it being based upon their views of the were soundly beaten. And yesterday Leanplays from a standpoint altogether different from that occupied by the umpire. Ignoring the fact that the moment the umpire takes his stand on the field to discharge his difficult, dangerous and onerous duties, he faces eighteen bitter enemies in the two contesting teams, besides not having a single friend seated in the bleacheries and but few in the grand stand seats, the scribes form themselves into a committee of the whole on umpiring, and from their seats in the press box proceed to pronounce as "rotten" every decision made by the umpire that does not accord with their partisan ideas, and when the umpire has closed his hard work they ventilate in their re-ports their one-sided judgment of the um-piring and as a small property. piring, and, as a rule, proceed to roast the umpire as they rarely do the rowdy kick-ers of the fraternity. If the umpire does well in his position—a rare thing from the scribe's view—they never, "or hardly e.er." give him a word of praise. In fact, haif the poor umpiring that has been done this season is largely due to the partisan criti-cism by the base ball scribes.

IN CHESS CIRCLES.

The sixth game of the match for the District chess championship was played Wednesday night and won by Capt. O'Farrel, whose score is now three won, two for Mr. Gwyer and one drawn.

Mr. C. S. De France, secretary of the Nebraska State Chess Association and chess editor of the Lincoln Independent, has announced his intention of issuing a new chess magazine, intended especially for the players by correspondence, in which the interest has grown so great in late periods.

The following brilliant game was played at the New York tourney, 1889. The win-ner was the well-known late Captain Pol-
